

Google's free RailTel WiFi

Google have announced the launch of free high-speed public wi-fi service at over 15 stations across India <http://dgit.in/Grailltelwifi>

Panchatantra on nexGTV

Subscription based app nexGTV launches nexGTV Kids to familiarize kids with famous tales <http://dgit.in/nxgtvkids>

Bazaar

AMD RX 470

More bang for your buck than the RX 480

Coming in right behind the RX 480 is the AMD RX 470 based on the same Polaris 10 chipset but with a minor reduction in core count. With mainstream gamers and video game streamers in its iron sights, AMD's RX 470 is all about getting 60 FPS at 1080p for all the AAA games while getting the full feature set that the new Polaris GPU microarchitecture.

Features

Unlike the RX 480, the RX 470 is only being sold in the 4GB variant, at least, for now. Will there be an 8GB variant in the future? Quite unlikely. Since memory compression techniques have been improving over the last three years and that memory speeds have increased quite a bit, we really don't need more VRAM.

As for the streaming part, you are able to play AAA-games with high settings on one side while encoding a stream to be sent to either Twitch or YouTube. And it's even HEVC ready so as the industry moves towards adopting the new standard, the RX 470 will be ready to go. So if you're looking to be a streamer, then consider the RX 470 to be a gateway GPU for your streaming needs. Aside from the memory, everything else is the same as the RX 480 and not much needs to be said about the RX 470 from a feature standpoint. There's the asynchronous compute and a better implementation of Vulkan API than the competition which provides higher gains with AMD cards.

Build Quality

For this review, AMD sent us the MSI RX 470 GAMING X 4G. With the classic red and black colour scheme, the MSI RX 470 GAMING X 4G fits in quite well with the whole AMD theme. Since this is a mid-range card, one wouldn't assume to get a lot in terms of build quality and that's where the card ends up a little surprising. Because it holds up to the quality standards of cards that are priced higher than the RX 470. The cooling system which they're calling TwinFrozr VI utilises two heatpipes that snake through a fin assembly which are in turn cooled by two 100mm fans. And again, these fans have a hybrid design that combines air-flow as well as static pressure. As far as noise levels go, the fans are quite silent but in an open-air test bench, the audio levels are noticeable. And it goes without mentioning that the fans don't turn on till a certain temperature threshold level (generally, 60 C) is hit.

Price
₹15,990

The card has no backplate, and that's not a feature that'll be missed. For the power connector, the MSI RX 470 GAMING X 4G uses an 8-pin connector which is way more than needed for a graphics card that has a typical board power of 120 W. However, being an overclocked board with a fancy cooling solution, the 150 W ceiling of a 6-pin connector might be inadequate, hence the 8-pin connector.

Lastly, we see a non-standard arrangement with the video connector. Instead of the usual 3x DPI + 1x HDMI arrangement, we see a 2x HDMI + 2x DP + 1x DVI arrangement. We favour this since most multi-monitor setups utilising a mid-range card tend to have two monitors and this card would be easier to set up a 2x monitor rig without the need for adapters.

Performance

Let's start with the synthetics first. The RX 480 scored 5201 and the RX 470 scored 5055 in 3DMark Fire Strike Extreme which works out to 97 percent of the RX 480's performance. Even in CompuBench's Bitcoin mining test, it scored 96% of what the RX 480 does. So compute-wise, this card easily trumps the RX 480 in the price/performance department. Even GTA V scores approximately 66 FPS against the RX 480's 77 FPS and this works out to 85% performance. This means the RX 470 scales linearly with core count and for ₹15,990 you're getting a really good deal, be it for gaming or for compute.

Mithun Mohandas

Performance..... 61
Build 75
Value for Money 77

Specifications

GPU: Polaris 10 (Ellesmere); Stream Processors: 2048; Compute Units: 32; Core clock: 1206 MHz; Boost clock: 1254 MHz; VRAM: 4 GB GDDR5; Memory clock: 6600 / 6700 MHz; Memory bus width: 256-bit; TDP: 120 W; Power Connectors: 1x 8-PIN

Contact

AMD India Pvt Ltd
Phone: NA
Email: NA
Website: NA