

PIERCING BLOW

A NOT SO GOOD TACTICAL SHOOTER THAT LOOKS GREAT ON PAPER, BUT IS CURSED BY PAY2WIN!

By Manish "Trigger Happy" Rajesh
feedback@skoar.in

Piercing Blow, or Project Blackout, or Point Blank – whatever you want to call it – is a 3D lobby based shooter published by Zepetto, following along the lines of games like Counter Strike. And we're talking old school Counter Strike here, not Global Offensive. You have the two opposing teams or factions, the CT-Force – short for Counter Terrorists we're assuming – and the Free Rebels. This isn't exactly a new game, it's been around for a while. They just slapped on a different name and put it on Steam. While it's now being called Piercing Blow, the North American and European version used to be called Project Blackout, however, it's still called Point Blank in Asia.

WHAT IS IT?

Piercing Blow is a "tactical shooter", and one of the many developed in Korea, such as Blackshot or Combat Arms. The way the game works is simple enough, winning games earns you points, and these points can be used to purchase weapons and equipment within the game's store. Additionally, it's got a quest system within the game, wherein you're asked to fulfil certain objectives or tasks within the game. Completing these gives you extra points and rewards you for playing regularly.