Unwind

How we unwind

Because Momos

We're all foodies here at the test lab and we're more than happy to add new fooderies to our list of places to snack at. All of us here share an unhealthy love for momos. A bit too much maybe? Naaw. We found a new place who now have dedicated fans in us. Momos are love, momos are life.

Large Screens Everywhere

Manish and Jayesh decided it was time for an upgrade. While Jayesh went for the 30-inch monitor, Manish went for the 55-inch one. We don't think he thought it through though, he now has to sit a good 6 feet away to actually look at the whole screen without breaking his neck.

Such Immunity, Much Sick

Someone or the other keeps falling sick over here. The weather being the way it is, we had a bout of viral fever doing the rounds and one by one we fell victim to sickness. But we're a sturdy bunch (not really, considering how often we fall sick) so it'll take more than that to keep us down!

digit DIARY

As we already mentioned in the "how we unwind" section above, everyone was taking turns falling sick. Colds, sore throats and viral fevers were running the show this month. Siddharth, however, was unfortunate enough to contract chikungunya. Kids, this is why you take precaution against mosquitoes. The little buggers can constrain you to your beds for weeks. The world could do without mosquitoes entirely we say.

We had Ganpati celebrations this month as well, and you all know what that means. Mumbai shuts down to celebrate and it's close to impossible to get anywhere by road. Add to that the loudspeakers and the noise and most of us barely got any sleep. In Abhijit's case it was so loud at his place, he actually camped in office to catch up on some sleep.

Anyway, thanks to all that and heavy rains, closing this month was delayed. Again. We normally delay closing by default but this time we have a legitimate excuse. And since we're veterans at delaying things we're also experts of the "last minute cram session". So we're sure we'd be scrambling about as usual even if we hadn't fallen sick.

Mithun was once again absent for most of closing – an entire week to be specific. This time the occasion was Onam and so off he went to his hometown somewhere in Kerala. We're all sadistic and were secretly enjoying the fact that he wouldn't get to eat any non-veg food but it turns out he still did. No respect for tradition these days we tell you!

Arnab decided to leave the comfort of buses and started taking the Mumbai local to save time. This was literally his first experience with the Mumbai locals and the poor chap was terrified, holding onto his belongings with a vice-like grip. We swear we see him silently say a little prayer just before he leaves everyday.

Following the hype that is Jio, Nikhil got himself a Jio SIM and all of us were curious to know if one could actually get speeds as high as they're claiming. One speed test later we were definitely seeing big numbers and Nikhil says he's satisfied with the speed. But we have to take his word for it because we don't really see it on his face.

Not much Counter-Strike happened this month, t'was mostly just Siddharth and Jayesh playing. The two of them are constantly oscillating between Gold Nova and Gold Nova 2. Manish on the other hand seems to be having a blast playing League on the new 55-inch screen.

Siddharth turned 30 this month. He wasn't too happy about it. We kept telling him that age is just a number but he still seemed pretty down about it. Nah we're kidding, we totally made fun of him and called him old. Feel free to write in and eathimold wish him well on turning 30.
