✉ Greetings Team Digit!

'Become a Hacker' was a lot better than 'Become a God'. In fact, the Hacker issue was the most savage of 'em all, especially the DVD. Because guess what – I installed Kali Linux with VirtualBox, and there I am 'Learning to hack'! I couldn't be happier. But don't worry I'd never hack you guys because cheating on you guys is the last thing I'd want to do! And I'm still a noob, don't fear me!

BTW Belated Happy 30th Birthday Siddharth! Don't you worry man, age is just a figure. Ok, I'm kidding, you're definitely goin' ol' man! Don't worry you guys, you will still be our tech heroes even when you turn 80!

I got one request – please publish a poster of CoD: Infinite Warfare with the next issue.

–Punarnava Malhotra

4 Hey thanks for not hacking us Punarnava. Since you are being so kind we'll see what we can do about that CoD poster. Stay tuned.

–Siddharth

✉ Greetings Team Digit!

First, I want to thank you all for the Battlefield poster (though it was me who recommended it, remember?) and also for introducing us to the new PS4 Pro and Slim console.

Now coming to the October issue. The editorial by Siddharth bhaiya (happy belated birthday, btw) was great, and it really enlightened me about the casualties caused by Apple in the name of 'Technological Progress', but one thing's for certain you really are, 'THE APPLE HATERS'. The Parenting 2.0 article was awesome and made my parents lenient about using gadgets more often.

To be honest, I couldn't read the whole cover story, but the one by Jayesh bhaiya was substantial. The comparison between the mid-tower cabinets was something unique and the one between the smartphones was nothing less. The Dmystify on 'Geology' sounded pretty boring, but you really know how to make things interesting. At last, the journey of the Fallout franchise was too good to skip, how about the 'Ups and Downs of Call of Duty' for the November issue?

Feedback for the October 2016 issue of Digit

I also have some important queries. My father needs a business laptop under 50k, so can you suggest one? (capable of handling AAA titles on medium settings). Also, can you guys reintroduce two DVDs? How about a poster of Dishonored 2, WWE 2K17 or Titanfall? You can give anything except a poster on Call of Duty: Infinite Warfare?

That's it for now. Keep up the good work and keep inspiring us.

–Sarang Devsaba

4 Thanks for the feedback Sarang. Though, none of us are "Apple Haters". I use an iPad Pro and Jayesh has a personal Macbook Air. We're unbiased; and in today's world of rampant fanboyism, that might just appear as "hating" :-). Check out Agent 001 this month for Laptop advice. As for your poster Punarnava (above) is really dying for an Infinite Warfare one. What shall we do?

✉ I am Sritej from Darbhanga, Bihar, a small town where tech is known only by a few. Here are some suggestions.

I am in class 10th and my parents want me to go Kota for IIT prep (which I don't like). But I want to learn programming. So can you suggest any place where I get the good environment of a techie and a student so I can study and secure my future? I want to modify my PC so I would need your help. I don't like dmystify. I am spending Rs. 200 a month for a tech magazine not for a history or biology magazine. Instead you can give a hand book programming like the encyclopedias you gave in special issues.

–Sritej Kumar

4 There's nothing to not like about the IITs. You can learn programming anywhere, including at an IIT, if you have the motivation. Study hard. While Digit guides you about technology, dmystify aims to make your core science fundamentals strong. Diversity is necessary to make your knowledge well rounded.

–Siddharth

✉ I really like the dmystify booklets as they explain various theories on science and technology. The 'Earth' and 'Quantum World' were my most favourite Dmystifys. I also like SKOAR since I'm a gamer too. I had, will and (maybe) always read this magazine.

P.S. Happy (belated) birthday to Siddharth Bhaiyya! I just want to know if he's
