

Acer Swift 7 for $1099

Acer's latest offering, the Swift 7 is the thinnest 13.3-inch FHD laptop out there, measuring just 9.9mm thick. <http://dgit.in/ASwift7>

Daydream on Play Store

The Daydream Keyboard features "on-screen virtual keyboard for Daydream applications" <http://dgit.in/DDrmKeybd> going to continue to be a gamer or is he going to move away from it?

Inbox

–Ritujith Manoj a.k.a. Titanslayer

Well right now I've just deranked from Gold Nova III. I'm thinking of uninstalling CS: GO and quitting gaming forever! Nah. JK. #Gamer4Life

–Siddharth

I have been an avid reader of Digit magazine. Initially, I had subscribed to Chip as well, but pretty soon I understood Digit was way ahead. Congratulations to the complete team right from its inception.

One of the most important point of being relevant is to keep changing according to the needs of the current technology and you're top notch in this regard.

The editors – Siddharth, Jayesh and Robert – you Trimurti are doing a great job with your views about futuristic technology or getting nostalgic (Jayesh). I'm sure the people in the background are really working hard to put out a superb magazine every month. Your dmystify booklet is wonderful because being introduced to other topics is much needed for even technology enthusiasts.

One last point keeping the DVD that you provide is troublesome. Can you workout a way by which the subscriber can directly take from your app/cloud?

–Anil Billawa

You have guessed correctly in saying that Digit is the result of a team effort. Each and every contribution big or small – from the writers, logistics team, to the sales guys and everyone in between – makes Digit what it is. Happy reading.

–Siddharth

Dear Digit, this mail can be ended in a single line: You guys rock! But naturally, with every praise and criticism come suggestions. The editorials are actually interesting. Specially Robert's and Siddharth's (don't worry Jayesh, you'll always be the dark horse driving the other two. And the dark horse always wins). The dmystify on quantum world was pretty interesting. Since I'm a guy from finance background, it's a pretty nice entry for us noobies. The SKOAR posters are actually awesome. Please add reviews of beta launches in SKOAR. I could go on and on but as all things go, it must end.

–Vaibhav Sharma

Yup. I don't know what we'd do without Jayesh wipes tear

–Siddharth

Dear Sid and team, I'm a regular reader and subscriber. I have one request, could you guys please use smiling photos of yourselves along with the articles? Why so serious?

–Ravi

Lol Ok.

–Siddharth

LETTER OF THE MONTH

Wow! If I had to explain everything that you guys are, in just one word, I would only say, wow!

I have been thinking about writing to you guys for a long time but every time I start writing, it turns out to be so long that don't end up sending the mail out of embarrassment.

Digit has now become a part of my life, not just as an addiction or source of verified knowledge but also as a part of my thinking and learning curve. I am not just finding information about technology but also understand it, I can figure out how things work just by observing them and referring to some of my pre-recorded mental data, and that was provided by this mag. I grew with Digit and Digit grew with me. The first time I read Digit I was baffled, astonished and excited at the same time. And the narrator was Robert. I have always been a fan of his style. Talking about the style, this is perhaps the only technology magazine that you might silently read and out of the blue burst into laughter. One fact followed by the second, followed by an off-topic witty joke that throws you midair with laughter.

The cover story is always awesome not just by the stuff in it but also because of the witty names, Appsutra, Angel or Demon?, Kanjoos Tech, U Mad Bro?, etc. People often tell me that I'm wasting 200 bucks for some 4 or 5 pages of the cover story; in reply I simply challenge them to use those 200 rupees for internet, books or anything else they like, and bring out something equally interesting and unique within a month.

They have always failed, all hail Digit!

The only thing I don't like is the packaging. The tapes are needed I suppose but they end up tearing the covers and cutting through the pages and posters.

I don't want to be demanding but I had some requests:

1. I'm a graphic designer. Could you make a video showcasing how your cover visuals are made?
2. Please try to check the DVDs. I have got some faulty DVDs that didn't run.
3. This one is optional but Robert and Siddharth should do cosplays as Agent 47 and Altair respectively, you guys will really rock!

May the force be with you!

–Cliff Rock

First of all apologies for shortening your letter Cliff. It was over 1000 words long! And while we love detailed feedback, this time the Inbox section is just two pages (as you'll notice), so we had no option but to cut it short. For the same reason I can't even give you a very detailed reply. But know this – your letter has made our day. It was circulated in the whole company not just Team Digit. Great idea about the video and yes we've improved quality checks on our DVDs. Expect a detailed reply in your inbox soon but for now I just want to wrap up with saying – Robert will make an excellent Agent 47. I on the other hand, am too short to pull off a convincing Altair :-)

–Siddharth

