Women are giving men tough competition in every field despite centuries of hardships. And when it comes to the world of smartphone apps, which have all sorts of possible specialisations, there are apps that cater specifically to women as well. And after going through a lot of such apps, and features within existing apps, we believe that there are certain apps that are a must have for every woman in the country. Wondering why we didn't do this on women's day? Because we believe that there doesn't need to be a specific day to suggest something good for our mothers, sisters, friends and all the women out there.

Safety

Let's face it – India isn't a shining beacon when it comes to women's safety. There have been numerous assault cases across the country that have brought bad reputations to the country as well as put women in a situation where they are afraid to travel late or alone. To empower women and make them feel safer on the roads, developers and various companies have built quite a few very useful safety apps.

bSafe is a very popular app for women's safety. It is based on a social model in which you add friends to the app to form something like a social security network. With such a network in place, simply enabling your location and sharing it through the app allows your friends to see where you are. The 'Follow me Live' feature allows selected friends to track you via GPS, effectively letting them walk you home even if they are not with you.

There is also a 'Timer' mode, in which the app can send alerts to selected contacts if you do not check in within a certain time. The 'Fake call' feature, that even lets you select who the call should be from is also very useful. And as a last ditch measure, there is the Guardian alert button, which when pressed sends an alert to your friends and family members regarding where you are (GPS) and what is happening (video feed) with an optional siren as well.

Health

We all know that men are from Mars and women are from Venus. This is especially true when it comes to our physiologies. But the irony is, many
