considerate manner. Globally, a number of such portals offer Hajj kits and have itinerary planning provisions too.

7) Live Streaming

Another interesting concept that is steadily gaining momentum across temples in India, is the provision of live streaming using webcams; enabling users to watch the tourists and devotees live. This feature is offered by the historic Shri Krishna-Balaram Temple in Vrindavan, Uttar Pradesh (<http://dgit.in/SKBVrindavan>). Religious website Krishna.com (<http://dgit.in/KrishnaLive>) has provided a list of all the Krishna temples across the world (US, Canada, Italy, Slovenia, etc) with webcams. Each listed temple has a schedule of the live programs. Vrindavan.tv (<http://www.vrindavan.tv/>) provides daily darshan of the ISKON Vrindavan deities and also streams classes (in both Hindi and English) on major festivals like Janmashtami. Other portals that offer similar services are: poojalu.com (<http://dgit.in/PdPjaLive>) and mayapur.tv (<http://mayapur.tv/>)

Wrapping up

Tapping into the massive religion industry, a number of players are entering this online market with novel concepts and services to offer. Technology making religion more accessible to people has resulted in a paradox - it has brought those who lead busy lives closer to spirituality, but at the same time it has made the traditional practices distant. The march of progress and perhaps a step in the right direction, we figure.

The dynamics of religion are changing at a rapid pace, but what we are left to ponder over is has commercialization crept into this new way of worship too? 🇮🇳
