Q&A

A Hi Atharva, green lines or dots or artifacts on screen are usually a sign of a bad unit and the best solution would be to have it replaced through warranty as soon as possible. But before that, make sure you've properly installed the GPU on the motherboard and are using a properly functioning cable to connect your GPU to your monitor. Also, the graphics driver software shipped in the DVD could be an older version, so it would be better to download and install the latest driver from their website.

Q YouTuber problems

Hi Digit Team!

I'm thinking of hosting a YouTube channel for uploading gameplay videos. The problem I'm facing now is that the gameplay videos which I record using MSI Afterburner are too big in size. I record the videos at 1080p and a minute of video will be about 50MB. I need to know how to compress these videos without compromising the quality. Which software should I use?

—Chaitanya

A Hi Chaitanya, 50MB for a minute of 1080p video sounds pretty good actually. You are probably already using lossy compression to get that. You certainly cannot get smaller file sizes without losing noticeable quality at 1080p. You're either going to have to get a faster new connection, struggle through it with your existing line, or else start the channel with 720p which you should be able to get down to around the 20/25 MB per minute size.

Q A lost Redmi Note 3

Hi team, my Xiaomi Redmi Note 3 phone is stolen and it's been a month. In Google's My Accounts, under connected devices and apps I can see that device's last seen. Is there any way to connect to that lost device and track the device location? No tracking apps are installed on that device. Thanks.

—Sooraj

A Hey Sooraj, it's unfortunate that your phone was stolen. You can install Android Device Manager on another Android phone, and there you'll be able to see all your previous devices where you had signed in with your Google account. But to be able to get the accurate location your Note 3 needs to be switched on along with the GPS. Otherwise, it will show you the last location it was online.

Q Auto shutdown

Hi,
when I power on my computer, it starts up but shuts down almost at the same time in about two seconds. There are no beeps from the motherboard. I tried keeping it plugged in for 10 minutes before turning it on in case the CMOS needs to charge but still, with no results. Then I unplugged the mouse, keyboard, monitor and even the hard disk from it before turning it on. But still no luck. It's be great if you guys can help me out. Thank you

—Jomin

A Hey Jomin, automatic shutdowns can occur from several reasons. First, check whether your motherboard is shorting anywhere due to a screw or metallic object on the back. Next, you need to check your memory modules by replacing them with a borrowed one or simply using one RAM module if you have a kit of two modules. You also need to check overheating and the best solution would be to clean and reapply thermal paste. Other than the above options, your motherboard or PSU could be defective, or something as silly as a loose cable. The best approach here would be to check these off one by one to find the problem and then solve that one.
