

worldview

OUR PICK OF THE BEST TECH ARTICLES FROM AROUND THE GLOBE

(MUST READS)

RASPBERRY PI GAMING

This DIY project will guide you on how to make the ultimate retro gaming machine. All you need is a Raspberry Pi, mouse, keyboard, an output display and a microSD card/card reader.

<http://dgit.in/RspbryPiGM>

MUSIC FOR PRODUCTIVITY

Can listening to your favourite song amidst doing some work really increase your productivity? Studies can prove that for most type of demanding tasks, anything but silence can hurt your performance.

<http://dgit.in/musc4work>

THE PERFECT FIREPLACE

Januaries are usually the coldest time of the year in most parts of India, and here is how you can build the perfect fireplace to beat the winter.

<http://dgit.in/fireplaceBst>

FIXING THE INTERNET

The internet has begun to corrode. There are so many new bugs in the system and it is being rapidly exploited by hackers and trolls. What is the cost of all this? How can we fix it entirely to make it alright again?

<http://dgit.in/FixIntrnt>

[The Verge Corner]

THE KEY TO VIRTUAL REALITY

Researchers at the Panoptic Studio in Carnegie Mellon University are trying to understand body languages to improve the way robots relate to human beings. They also believe it holds the key to the future of virtual reality. <http://dgit.in/VRfutre>

Wired town going wireless

The Blacksburg Electronic Village at the time of their launch in the 1990s were the state of the art. Today, with the passing of internet, the once vibrant network has become obsolete.

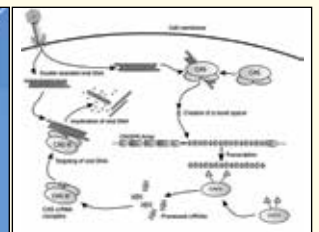

<http://dgit.in/BEVabsolete>

Writing a tweetstorm

Ever been annoyed when you want to write more than 140 characters on Twitter? Well, here's the best way you can send multiple tweets at once to form a single continuous message.

<http://dgit.in/tweetstrm>

Who owns CRISPR?

CRISPR is a DNA cutting technique used in scientific studies. This new research is worth million of dollars and a patent hearing is tearing the scientific community apart.

<http://dgit.in/CRISPRcase>