TV SHOW

Iron Fist

In Marvel's latest TV Show – Iron Fist – the story is about one Danny Rand, who survives a plane crash at the young age of ten. Unfortunately, the crash claims the lives of both his parents. Fifteen years later Danny returns home to find that everything has changed and everyone thinks he's crazy for impersonating a dead guy. Did we mention that Danny is also heir to Rand-Meachum Incorporated, a multi-million dollar conglomerate? The Meachum in Rand-Meachum Incorporated, is Harold Meachum, who supposedly died of cancer. The corporation is now run by his kids who promptly have Danny sent to a mental hospital, because pfft, not buying that whole “I’m Danny Rand!” thing. No more spoiler, although, there isn’t much that we missed with just the first two episodes, which do a good job of making you interested. We’re definitely hooked.

MOVIE

Logan

The first time we ever saw Hugh Jackman as the Wolverine was way back in 2000, and 17 years later we can safely say he’s still got it. Logan is the third and final movie in the Wolverine solo movie series. It’s also the last time we’ll ever be seeing Hugh Jackman as the Wolverine. This is both sad, because he’s going, and exciting, because we get to look forward to a new Wolverine. Anyway, back to the movie, without attempting to give away too much of the plot – it’s the year 2029 and mutants are a dying breed. Professor X’s iconic school is no more and mutants have to live a life of hiding and being hunted (again). Don’t expect to see a lot of other X-Men in this movie.

Most of the movie revolves around Logan, who now drives a Limousine for a living, and Charles Xavier, who’s suffering both mentally and physically and needs to take pills to keep his psychic powers in control. Of course, that’s not all, but anything more would involve giving away major spoilers so we’ll stop there. The movie itself is action-packed and has no shortage of gore. You’ll be seeing a lot of mutilations, courtesy of a pair of adamantium claws (for the most part). However, what gets you about Logan isn’t the action, but the emotions of the characters. Then of course there’s Hugh Jackman’s performance, not to say the others didn’t perform well. But this is his last and he knows it, so of course, he had to make it the best movie in the franchise to date. You don’t have to be a comic book nerd to enjoy this one.
