

Walnut-shaped moon?

Saturn's recently discovered moon, Pan, has a diameter of about 35km.
<http://dgit.in/PanIMG>

Baxter the robot

Baxter can correct its mistakes by reading electrical brain activity.
<http://dgit.in/brainBaxter>

Unwind

How we unwind

Vive-ing through

We got to play with a Vive this month, thanks to which we almost forgot about the closing altogether. One moment we were stranded on a broken space-station, the next moment we were knee deep in VR accounting (apparently, that's a thing). But soon, virtual reality gave way to actual reality and we had to bid a sad farewell to the Vive.

Rag'n'Bone Man - Human

Immediately after watching Mass Effect: Andromeda's launch trailer, Siddharth got hooked to the song. In his defence, it IS a very catchy song. Didn't take long before everyone in the labs was humming the song. FUN FACT: It's been more than 20 years since Backstreet's Back released. Feel old yet?

Riverdale

This month, Arnab got his hands on the new show Riverdale. Quite to his surprise, he found out that it's not just a live-action version of the comic book – Archie. It's a complete re-imagining of the comic into a murder mystery. Never thought we'd ever see that happening in Riverdale. Too much has already been said!

diGit DIARY

March was quite the active month, as compared to the last one. First things first, Yanger has joined the test labs full time. The young Padawan has finally become a full-fledged Jedi. Welcome to the labs and good luck with Mithun!

After managing to close somewhat on time last month (yea, that actually happened), we thought we'd breeze by this month. Nothing could stop us now! This month will be easy-oh look at that, we missed the deadline yet again.

Of all of us, you could say Mithun has been the most busy. He secluded himself in a corner of the labs and declared himself dead to the rest of the world. He did pop by every now and then to make a few snarky comments, but eventually headed back to his corner to run tests and benchmarks.

We got quite a few toys to play with this month. Not including the Vive (which we've mentioned above), we even got to play with a drone. Though, we were quite terrible at flying it. Actually, Mithun was the one who flew it the most...

Manish, who had been using a BlackBerry (what? People still use those?) ever since he joined, finally got himself a new phone. He still hasn't thrown us a party though. Arnab, who recently broke his phone, is currently stuck with a Windows phone, so he's now in a similar predicament.

An interesting discovery made this month has to do with Abhijit and how he used toilet paper while he was abroad.

If that has piqued your curiosity, you can ask Abhijit himself, @babumshaaye.

On the gaming front, both Siddharth and Abhijit deranked in CS, but Siddharth has been more concerned about playing another game: Mass Effect: Andromeda. He couldn't wait to play the trial when it hit Origin and even dropped whatever work he was doing to get in an hour of the game. Also, in case you guys didn't know, Yanger is a DotA guy, so we're expecting some future conflicts between him and Manish, who is a LoL guy.

After listening to Weeknd's Starboy at least a 100 times, we finally looked up the lyrics (let's be honest, nobody understands what he's saying). Instant clarity.

