Happy Birthday

Not just another big brother story. This one has cake... we hope!

If you do not understand the difference between a Choco Lava cake and a Devil's Dinner cake then you probably shouldn't be running a bakery", barked Dheeraj impatiently. The irony between his name and his demeanour was not lost on anyone in the room. But right now, what mattered most was getting these idiots to understand their mistake and get a replacement made in time. As he looked up the order receipt on his smart lenses, dealing with the clutter of his daily documents folder was unavoidable. He was placing some of those virtual files on the table next to him, when the receipt was finally projected on the counter in front of him. He tapped the AR table and hit 'Public' on the visibility settings.

"Look. Black forest 1kg cake made with Ghana Dark chocolate", he stated as the baker copied the bill onto his own memory with a swipe on the table, "that was the order. Now, how long until you get it right?"

"Two hours Monsieur. We'll be doing this on priority"

Dhiraj saved the recorded clip to his auxiliary memory card, stored in a crevice behind his ear. They weren't getting away with this on his sister's birthday.

The cab was about 10 minutes away. He brought up the clip he had just saved on to the table in the waiting area. Zooming onto the baker, he checked his name tag – M Beaumont. Well, if being French meant being incompetent, he'd rather have a good old Indian halwai make his sweet dishes any day. He checked the mini-map overlay on his palm once again – the cab was still about 4 minutes away. That should be reasonably close to fire
