

Digit Geek

“WHY THE CHANGE?” is what anyone reading this will ask themselves. Some of you might like it, others might love it, and still others might hate it, we hope you all notice it! Often, people prefer something familiar over something new, and magazines are no exception. We're like a spouse, who suddenly changes his or her entire appearance and character. Whilst some love it, and find it a way of spicing things up and not becoming too predictable, others might wonder who this stranger is lying in bed next to them – and magazines are awesome when read in bed, aren't they?

Like old marriages, however, we think it's important that your favourite magazine also keep you guessing from time to time. Of course, we think of Digit just as we would a person. Which means, Digit the brand has a character that we are all very clear about in our heads when we write for it. The definition keeps changing, and is malleable (just as a person is), but the definition is very close to how we think of you as individuals. If we took every single one of you, took only the qualities essential to being a geek and cobbled all that together to make a person, that would be Digit.

Whilst discussing the change, and whilst launching the Digit Geek sub-brand, we tried to narrow down what it means to be a geek today. Who is a geek? Is it cool to be a geek? Why geek, why not nerd? ...and a hundred other questions like those.

I'll be honest, we haven't finalised the plan. Like our last redesign (many years ago), this too is a work-in-progress, and will no doubt change as and when we get feedback from you. I'm hoping you will take time to write to us and tell us your thoughts – and I don't just mean about the magazine you hold in your hands, but about the whole concept of Digit Geek as well.

But what is Digit Geek? Is it a magazine? A site? An app? Actually it will be all of the above and more, and even we don't know exactly what it will or should be. All that we know is that you geeks are the centre of our universe, and we want to find a way to help you be geekier somehow. If you want more indepth knowledge about technology, we want to find a way to give it to you, and whether you want that in print, online, in an app, or even over old school email, we don't care how. We just want to empower you to be geekier than ever before. Why? Because whether you like the word or not, the geek shall inherit the earth, and as Indians, we want to make sure we claim our share of that global inheritance.

Coming to this magazine, we've gotten rid of a lot of the old sections, though favourites such as DGT, Bazaar and devworx obviously remain. We've broken it all into four main categories – Tech, Sci, Cult and Alt. This is because we think these are the four major aspects to being a geek. Tech (or Technology) is a no-brainer. We couldn't really be “Your Technology Navigator” without the Tech, now could we? Of course the Tech is now all up front, in your face, and right at the beginning of the magazine...taking centre-stage, and being the star. That's not to say there isn't technology through the rest of the magazine, because there obviously is, but we think these are the most important tech stories of the month.

Sci is obviously short for Science. Honestly, we haven't really increased the science coverage of the magazine much, but we have grouped it all together, because we think it makes it easier to read. Of course we have all new subsections under it, which we will let you discover on your own. Hopefully, you will like the treatment we've given it all, because we think science is an integral part of being a geek.

Cult is short for culture, and it's a tremendous part of being a geek that we have been missing out on thus far. We've done it all in bits and pieces through issues in the past, but, honestly, it's impossible to be a geek without being aware of the latest in geek culture. What may often seem like useless information goes a long way in defining a person's character, and opening them up to new experiences. Stay abreast with geek culture, and we guarantee you will impress better in both personal and professional settings.

Alt, as you would have guessed already, stands for alternative. Why? Because geeks are all weird in some way, and wacky, and know things that make regular folk go “wtf?!” (what the fornication). This is also something we think is essential to building character. The idea is to give you more abstract stuff to talk about, to challenge you to think totally out of the box, and stay informed, so that you too (we hope) can sound as wise (and wacky) as someone like Elon Musk, when you talk. Just remember us when you become a billionaire, that's all! :)

“If we took every single one of you, took only the qualities essential to being a geek and cobbled all that together to make a person, that would be Digit.”

Liked or hated this column? Let me know at: facebook.com/raaabo | @raaabo | robert@digit.in