

16 Years of digit Geekdom!

Forgive us our little indulgence as we toot our own horn...

Robert Sovereign-Smith | robert@digit.in

IN TECHNOLOGY, 16 years is like 16 generations, and even in human time, it's as good as at least one generation. We have readers for whom the 16 years would have flown by, and feels like just yesterday – that's our older group. We also have readers who weren't even born when the first issue of Digit was printed... and that really does make some of us feel rather old!

And what do you do when you feel old? Reminisce of course, and that's what this article is about. Here's a look at how we've been geeking it out since June 2001. If your list is different, and you want to start an argument with us about why your list would be different, write to us at editor@digit.in and have your say – we'll throw in some t-shirts as lucky draw prizes for those of you geeks who do write in.

Remember, you can get access to everything we've ever published by writing to archive@digit.in and requesting access.

JUNE 2001

Our very first issue, all the way back in June 2001 was memorable because we took to reminding people about personal security, and got you to be safe by testing antiviruses and firewalls. Security is still a big concern, even today

02

MAY 2002

At a time when most people weren't even sure about assembling their own PC, we tested 47 motherboards for Intel and AMD to make sure the real geeks would never get cheated by assemblers
