

10

FEBRUARY 2010

Another security-related cover story, but the really memorable thing about this issue was the very first Crack The Code we ever did, and with all the clues hidden in the pixel art cover that took design 20 days to make... it was a fun issue!

11

JUNE 2011

Our tenth anniversary double-issue was special indeed. It's the biggest baddest issue we've ever done, and we pulled it off with a skeleton staff. It's got columns from all over the globe, and is a great read even today. We hope to outdo it in 2021...

12

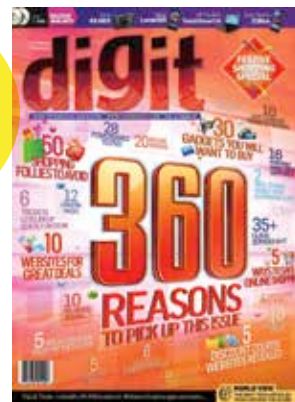

SEPTEMBER 2012

Our most controversial cover ever, but it did its job in bringing to light the fact that you're just a walking wallet to most technology companies, and they take you for granted...

13

OCTOBER 2013

This cover says it all...

14

AUGUST 2014

The most indepth and unbiased smartphone OS usability test ever conducted by anyone, ever, and the results were shocking!

15

FEBRUARY 2015

This actually wasn't the cover, because the cover was censored... We took a stance against the censoring of content online by governments across the world, and showed you how to bypass their silly blocks

16

FEB 2016

Facebook's Free Basics made a massive uproar because of net neutrality, but we looked at both sides of the debate and made people very uncomfortable. As is usual, we got called names for doing so...

