

Enhancing your Twitter experience

We go through several useful tips and tricks to enable a better experience on Twitter.

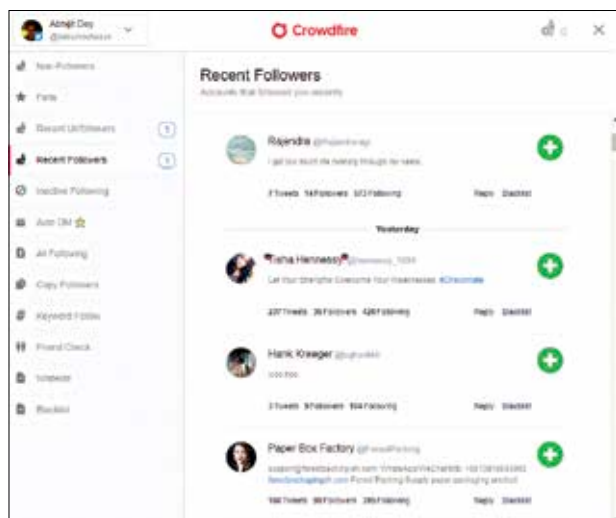

AMONG THE PLETHORA OF SOCIAL MEDIA MANAGEMENT TOOLS, there are many services that are beneficial to you as a brand or business. As an individual, those tools might turn out to be overkill or too complicated. However, if you see yourself rising as a public figure whose opinions actually matter online, then you should definitely jump onto them. Don't expect many tips to help you evaluate your followers since understanding the respective dashboard will require a lot of experimentation and explanation. Here are a few tips and tricks to become a power user on Twitter.

FIND OUT WHO UNFOLLOWED YOU

For people who care about their follower count, unfollows can be heartbreaking. Twitter shows the people who follow you through notifications but doesn't display the ones who unfollow. There are several services out there that keep scanning your follower list every day and sending you a report about unfollowers. This data gives you information on when did people unfollow that might answer the doubt on whether it was triggered by specific content in your tweets. It's also a sneaky way to keep a watch on whether your friends unfollowed you. Formerly known as JustUnfollow, the Crowdfire app gives you an analysis of your Twitter account including unfol-lowers and people who don't follow you back. It also allows you to automatically send a direct message (DM) whenever someone follows you. Another web-based service called filwrs is a simple tool to look at your followers and unfollowers, and nothing else.

Crowdfire lets you automatically DM new followers

Users who are only interested in looking at their followers and unfollowers should check out this service.

SWITCH ON ALERTS WHEN YOUR NAME IS MENTIONED

Warble allows you to use Twitter search operators to serve you alerts everyday. When someone mentions or replies to you, a notification is automatically sent to you in the app. But what if you wanted to know whether people are talking about you without directly mentioning you? In Warble, you can create alerts using operators that will send you reports at the end of the day through email. For example, if you set an alert for your full name, whenever someone's tweet includes your full name, an alert will be sent to you. There are different alerts that can be set using the long list of operators. This tool is primarily used to monitor keywords and the discussions going on around it. Using

CREATE TWITTER STORMS/THREADS IN AN EASIER WAY

Did you suddenly have an epiphany about something and go on to tweet about it, creating a 10 tweet long thread in the process? While you were typing them down, you must have edited your tweets several times to fit the sentences together and number them. Well, turns out there are services and apps out there that take care of it all. Storm It is an app present on both Android and iOS where you can type your thoughts without worrying about structuring them. The app will automatically divide your block of text into separate tweets and number them as well. If you're using Twitter web, Writerack lets you create tweet storms easily. Copy and paste your content into the text area and click on preview to check how the tweets will go out. There's also a premium version which allows you to change the numbering style, add images in between and post more than 100 tweets (the limit for free accounts) a day. Looking at how popular tweet storms are becoming, Twitter might be working on a feature to natively support it in their official app. Brace yourselves! On a side note, if your threads are crossing 10 tweets, it would be best to just go ahead and create a blog post on Medium.

CURATE TWEETS INTO A BEAUTIFUL STORY

When there's a particular event happening, a lot of good and bad tweets make the rounds throughout its dura-