

Storm It makes it easier to create tweet storms

tion. Say you wanted to bring all the good tweets together to one single location so that people interested in the event could go through them. You could create a thread where you post the links of your favourite tweets as replies but that won't look visually appealing. You've probably heard about Storify where users can collate tweets, images, videos, GIFs, etc. When published, all the content combined together is presented in a single timeline. It generates a unique URL which can then be shared on Twitter. People visiting the storify link will be able to interact with the content and leave sidenotes on it. Essentially, it looks like a blog post made up of tweets and other forms of content. Twitter launched its own answer to Storify with Moments but it's only restricted to adding tweets. The only advantage to Moments is that it's available directly via the official Twitter app and is easy to create. Storify allows you to create stories only through web and they don't have an app. Additionally, Moments are viewable through the app rather than having to visit a webpage on Storify. The only deal breaker with Moments is the inability to add external links and content.

FIND THE PERCENTAGE OF FAKE FOLLOWERS

You don't want fake followers or spammy accounts hurting

Find out how many fake followers you have your credibility on Twitter. Followers can be bought online and driving an account with such a following will eventually damage your reputation if discovered by that one pesky curious follower. Not just your own account, if you're suspicious about someone's sudden rise in followers, there are two services to help you find out. Twitter Audit goes through the followers and gives a percentage of real and fake followers. It's a free tool for your first audit and if you wish to re-audit with your new followers in the future then you'll have to pay up. Although Twitter Audit gives you an idea about how many fake followers you have, it doesn't distinguish between inactive and fake accounts. This is done by Fakers where inactive users aren't necessarily fake accounts but users who might have stopped using Twitter. The web app enables you to get a better audit of followers. The free version allows you to search up to three accounts.

LIVE TWEET ABOUT SPORTS IN A BETTER WAY

Being a sports fan and an avid Twitter user always results in live tweeting even the tiniest details from the match. It isn't much trouble for people who only follow folks who tweet about sports. But if you're following a lot of people and don't want their temporarily irrelevant tweets to flood your timeline, it's a good idea to revisit Twitter's List feature. You can create lists from the web and mobile apps on Android and iOS. Head over to your profile page, click on Lists and then on "Create new list". Enter a name and a description for others to understand the list better if you plan on making it public. And yes, your list can either be private or public. In Android, swipe left to the menu and tap on Lists then create one. On iOS, tap on the profile icon, then Lists and finally tap on the new list icon.

Storify lets you to create a visually appealing story around your tweets