

MESS AROUND WITH GOOGLE

Google has a lot of fun little easter eggs hidden away. Which is not surprising considering how long the search engine has been around. All you need to do to enjoy these easter eggs is type them into the search bar!

Do a barrel roll

This one is pretty self-explanatory and probably the most well known of the lot, hence it's going first. Go ahead and type "do a barrel roll" into the Google search bar.

It'll do exactly what you think it's going to do. But hey, some of you might be in for a surprise.

19

Askew

Stay away from this one if you have OCD. You might have the urge to throw your monitor out the window if you do. Jokes aside, this used to work with "tilt" too, but we guess tilt was being searched for too often (by salty League of Legends players probably) so they limited it to askew.

20

<blink>

What putting <blink> in the search bar does is makes every instance of the word blink in the search results blink. So <blink> makes all the blinks blink. Do the search, you'll see what we mean.

21

Google in 1998

Google's been around for a looong time. And it's been through a lot of changes over the years. So it would quite interesting to look at what Google looked like almost 20 years ago. So simply put down "Google in 1998" and go back in time. This one's a nostalgia trip and it's totally worth checking out!

22

Zerg rush

Those familiar with StarCraft will know what a Zerg rush is, but did you know Google has its own Zerg rush? Like everything else so far, just put the words "Zerg rush" into the search bar and put your APMS to the test.

23

Atari breakout

This one stands out a bit because you need to search for this one in Google Images for it to work. Even if you didn't know that the original title was called Breakout, you'll still be familiar with the game right away. #90sKids #Brickphones. Warning: we spent maybe an hour(or more) after we found out the first time.

24

Super Mario bros

Put in Super Mario bros into the search bar and you'll be greeted with a regular Google search result page. But on the right hand side, you'll notice that the "?" icon is actually interactable and you can click on it... well, go ahead and click on it! We're surprised even we didn't know about this one for this long.

25

Flip a coin

That's as straightforward as it gets. Ask Google to flip a coin for you, and it will. Don't worry it's not rigged or anything. It's just handy for those moments when you need to make a decision and are 50/50 about it.
