

their PC or laptop and quickly take a screenshot of their desktop.

The next step is to set that screenshot as their desktop wallpaper and hide all their icons. You could go a step further and hide the taskbar as well but you run the risk of being discovered. Instead, move the mouse pointer to the middle of the screen and disconnect it from behind the desktop. Sit back and chuckle.

47 Enable high contrast mode

In high contrast mode, windows ups your display's contrast levels to unbearable (for some) levels. Basically, it's an eyesore. But the thing about high contrast mode is that it has a little-known shortcut. So you can be sure that your non-geeky friends are going to have a hard time getting out of high contrast mode. All you need to do is use the [Shift] + [Left Alt] + [Print Screen] shortcut to enable high contrast mode.

48 Landscape flipped screen

A classic prank, best done during lunch breaks when you know your friend or colleague is going to leave their PC unattended.

Simply head on over to their PC, cross your fingers and hope it's not password protected, right click on their desktop, go the display settings and from the dropdown menu where it says landscape, simply choose landscape(flipped) and be on your way. Hopefully the monitor will go back to sleep before they're back.

49 Make spooky photos to scare your friends

This one is specific to an app. Basically what the app does is it adds a ghost to your photos. There's a bunch of ghosts you can choose from and they all look quite convincing. Convincing enough for us to suggest it in the first place. The ghosts can show up while you're taking the photo as well, so you could ask your friend to take a picture for you and give them a scare. It also makes spooky ghost sounds to accompany the prank.

Just a warning to keep your phone in mind and the person you're pranking doesn't just drop the phone or toss it. The app's literally called the Ghost Photo Prank app, you can find it here: <http://digit.in/GshtPrnk>

Binge Watch your favourite movie franchise

There are plenty of great movie franchises out there that are worth binge watching. Most of them will take up an entire day of yours, and some of them might even need more!

Get that popcorn ready, here are few of our picks for popular movie franchises to binge watch:

Back to the Future: This is the best time to watch this movie franchise, it'll be interesting to see what people from back then thought today would be like.

The Lord of the Rings: Including the Hobbit movies, this is one LONG franchise, you're going to need more than a day for this one. But hey, we geeks love a challenge.

The Godfather: You don't really expect us to give you a reason to watch this movie series do you? Regarded as some of the best movies of all time, we can rewatch this series countless times.

Star Wars: We're all in agreement here that the original trilogy was better, and as much as we'd like to ignore the existence of the new trilogy, we can't pretend it's not there. But hey, at least the two new Star Wars movies weren't as terrible.

James Bond: Agent 007 has been around for a long long time, well over 25 movies now and with several accomplished actors donning the role of the suave MI6 agent. Definitely a must watch series.

Turns out, there are way too many good movie series which are worth bingeing on, too many to mention here anyway. But here's a nice compilation of movie series' you and your buddies can binge on over weekends. www.bingemovies.com
