I've been hearing it for years... no... make that decades! First it was the laptop that would kill the PC, then laptops were considered PCs; then it was tablets, but they're supposedly dying themselves; and for the past five years every Tinder-using, Twittering and snapchatting "expert" insists the phone is all you need, and that PCs are passé.

Well of course PCs are useless for sending one another animated poo-emojis or layering your face with filters and overlays that make you look like an even bigger idiot than you are... That's like saying Sachin Tendulkar was a terrible basketball player! To which the only answer I can come up with is "No sh Sherlock. But the game we're talking about is cricket!"

Although millions still use PCs for silly things, they were never designed to fulfill the entertainment needs of useless cavemen who poke at everything with grubby fingers. The PC isn't for mouth-breathers – it's made for sophisticated prosumers and creators, and also those things called gamers.

When the Ed told us all to write something that celebrates the PC, I obviously couldn't just do that... I wanted to also bring some humility to the phone-y people of the world.

So without much further ado, here's my list of XV things that phones totally SUCK at!

I Upgrading: Why on earth do you think Apple is such a rich company? All those billions of dollars come from somewhere, and that somewhere is people who say "baa!". We smart ones learnt a long time ago to never give in to closed systems such as Apple's. It's why the Mac lines of computers failed miserably. It's only now when PC sales have dropped to only the serious buyers that they even show up as a blip on the chart. It's highway robbery to sell phones without the ability to upgrade storage via SD cards – and it's not just Apple that does it. Sure the RAM, CPU, GPU, etc might need to be on-chip and fixed, but storage? It's never going to change though... How am I so sure? I have faith in stockholder greed ensuring that it never happens – why let people keep their phones for longer by allowing component upgrades, when you can force or entice them to update every other year anyway!

II Screen size: No matter what phone you have, you just cannot get a decent-sized screen to be able to do any work. Even tablets are clunky and end up becoming lap-
