The software giant has finally realised that the accessory is dead and has stopped manufacturing it. <http://digit.in/kinectnomor>

Aggression linked to grey matter

A new study states that physical aggressiveness is associated with reduced grey matter in a key brain region. <http://digit.in/angrygm>

ing a lie to GovNet... but because there was no GovNet, you couldn't get caught or re-braingrammed... instead people paid to read these lies. There were so many lies, that only the best liars were rewarded!

I wonder if I would be a good liar?

No, no. I don't mean that. I wouldn't dream of lying to GovNet!

What I found very interesting about the lies was that some of it was stuff that eventually happened later. Much, much later. But some of it actually happened!

If it happened, was it a lie? Why does GovNet re-braingram us for lying? What if our lies are just later truths?

Oh no! I think I have a malfunction. I hope it's fixable, I don't want to be shut off! I mean it's good to serve the population after being shut off, but I'm hoping for at least a few more years of trying to find out about our past before I become a health bar!

Interestingly, did you know that there was a really old "movie" (they called it that because it was made of moving images) that predicted the Recycling Act of 2132 that formed our current society? Well, not really the way it actually happened, but supposedly this really old movie called Soylent Green was about a corporation turning dead humans into food. The surprising thing is that they were totally against it, and from what I can tell, the old writing talks of it as if it were a horrible thing to eat a fellow human!

Of course they only had a mere 7 billion people back then, so I cannot claim to know how they thought. But if they had 21 billion like we do now, I think they'd understand. Besides, what else would they eat today? Apparently the planet was crawling with animals, and the water was filled with these things called fish. It's been over a century since the last animals died out that I don't think there's anyone alive who has ever seen one.

Poor animals. GovNet must have killed them all after the Recycling Act was passed.

Sorry, I don't know why my mind keeps straying to GovNet... anyway, coming back... I don't really know anything about all of these old writings and movies and the like, because I cannot find any copies on GovNet. They were deemed unnecessary to preserve, and a waste of energy, sadly. Besides, without a scalped version, I cannot imagine how I would ever understand them anyway.

Deemed unnecessary or uncomfortable?

Ignore that... it's probably a fault in my braingramming.

A fault or a feature of thinking brains?

Anyway, as I was saying, there was also a guy called Elon Musk back then, who we have to thank for our scalps. Did you know that at one time, being like us now was considered a "disability"? The scalps were made for people who were called "paralysed".

People actually loved to move about and waste energy doing things in the outdoors with germs and insects, and had to wear these things called clothes to cover their bodies... of course they didn't have Auto-Govs back then... they called them robots, and robots were like malfunctioning AutoGovs of today. No wonder people lived in houses and had to go outdoors... they had no choice.

There was this group called gamers who were the closest to modern society back then. They stayed indoors more than most others. Truly the pioneers of modern society. We have them to thank for everything.

Thank or curse?

OK that's it, I'm going to request a re-braingramming myself! I hope to be back... I'll just leave you with a small factoid... It was also the same Elon Musk who bought and merged the two companies called Facebook and Twitter to make the original Fa-tter network. He also formed the original Gov network that currently runs the world. He claimed the Gov AI would be the end of the world as we knew it... how wrong was he?

Was he really wrong? Is this really what he'd call "living"?
