

SECURITY WATCH

Facebook starts selfie captcha

To strengthen security for its two billion plus users, Facebook has started asking its users for a photo, or rather, a selfie, that clearly shows their face to prove that they are not a bot.

According to reports, the social media giant is using a new kind of captcha – a type of challenge-response test used in computing to determine whether or not the user is human – to “catch suspicious activity at various points of interaction on the site, including creating an account, sending Friend requests, setting up ads payments, and creating or editing ads”.

The process is automated, including identifying suspicious activity and checking the photo. To determine if the account is authentic, Facebook evaluates the uniqueness of the photo.

<http://dgit.in/SelfieCaptcha>

MOBILE WATCH

Samsung Galaxy Note8 X 99 AVANT

Samsung is known to make special editions of its popular smartphones and the Galaxy Note8 is no exception. The Note8 X 99 AVANT Edition is being developed in partnership with 99 AVANT, a creative art brand that is known to just make 99 pieces of its artwork. Just like the rest of its artwork, the special edition Note8 will also be limited to 99 units. The South Korea-exclusive model will come with an additional case that will feature hand-crafted artwork, along with a separate print of the artwork. Additionally, you will also get a matching theme, icons and wallpapers. The entire package, including 256 GB of internal storage, comes to 1,911,000 South Korean Won (₹1,13,500 approx).

<http://dgit.in/Note8Avant>

APP WATCH

Subcast

Podcasts are, to put it simply, modern day radio. You listen to them when you want to, and do not have to tune in to catch your favourite show at a specific time. You may or may not be a big fan of podcasts but there's no denying that they are quite popular. Either ways, instead of manually curating your favourite shows or trying to find a good one to get started with, you could try Subcast.

The app essentially tries to be a radio app for podcasts, grouping these by topics like History Geek, Science Kid, Book Worm and more. All you need to do is start at a section of your choice, swipe left or right to switch between podcasts until you find one you like – then you hit the heart button so that the app can suggest more podcasts like that one from around the world.

Coming from the Indian audience's point of view, certain stations might not be relevant, but some podcasts are well worth your time. Apart from that, the app itself is pretty well designed. Missing features like adjusting audio quality, blocking particular shows and more do make it feel a bit unfinished though.

Medulance

India doesn't have a great track record when it comes to medical response. That's exactly what Medulance is trying to solve in its attempt to become the Uber for Ambulances. Currently operational in Delhi-NCR region, the app lets you book ambulances on demand.

Bottled

Remember the feeling of having a pen-friend? Bottled brings back the charm of talking to strangers - without the added hullabaloo of being a dating platform. You simply write a message, put it in a bottle and throw it into the ocean to be found by a stranger across the world.

Storyboard

Comic book fan or not, it sure would be fun to be in one, right? Storyboard, an app from Research at Google, takes your videos and turns them into pages of a comic book. Without letting you choose a particular layout, it does offer you alternatives when you refresh.