actual superhero revolution came around 1985. Raj Comics came out with a number of indigenous superheroes such as Super Commando Dhruva, Nagraj and Doga. These Indian superheroes instantly clicked with the Indian teenage audience and became immensely successful. They even gave birth to a new kind of rotating comic book libraries, usually run by local general stores, where you could rent a comic book for a day (ask your father about them if you are too young to have been born in the 'golden era of Indian comic books').

2000s TO PRESENT

The beginning of the new millennium brought about much change, mostly good, but some bad too. New technologies changed our lifestyle, interests and culture. Comic book sales started declining as people moved towards other forms of entertainment. Many publishing houses shut down. Attempts were made to revive the industry in the country, both by Indian and foreign publishing houses. Marvel launched its first Indian superhero – The Dhoni clad Indian Spiderman, to moderate success. Indie artists were supported by publishing houses like Campfire Graphic Novels which published interesting retellings of older classics like Tom Sawyer and Sherlock Holmes. Overall it was a sad and slow time for the Indian comic books and artists.

The turn of the decade marked a change. Thanks to popularity and easier accessibility of international comics, and also an increase in indie artists releasing original content, the comic book genre started gaining momentum.

The first Comic Con in India was organised in 2011 and was a success, giving both fans and artists a platform to interact and showcase their skills and love for the art form. Since then, Comic Con has been organised every year across the country, and has become bigger and better with every passing year. A few 'first time in India' records were also made and broken during this time. 'An itch you can't scratch', graphic novel by Sumit Kumar, an up and coming artist became the first graphic novel to get sold out in the country.

Holy Cow Entertainment was set up as a comic book publishing house, and found success with creative title, including Ravanayan, a retelling of Ramanyana with Ravan as the protagonist.

Image Comics, one of the leading name in the industry internationally, published Abhishek Singh's 'Krishna- a Journey within' making him the first Indian artist to be published by one of the biggest names in the industry.

The last couple of years have given the fresh hope to the art form and made people realise there is no dearth of talent in our country.

Quality talent which can rival the best of the worlds. We need to support these artists more though, and help them out in any way we can, be it sharing their works, or just talking about it with fellow comic enthusiasts.

FAMOUS INDIAN COMIC BOOK CHARACTERS

• Chacha Chaudhary

An extremely intelligent happy go lucky old man 'Jinka dimaag computer se bhi tez chalta hai' (his brain is faster than a computer) who lives with his wife, a street dog named rocket and a giant alien from the planet Jupiter called Sabu.

• Supandi

A funny guy, who does exactly what he is told by his employers, Supandi often falls into funny situations of his own creation. His stupidity and faithfulness are two of his 'virtues'.

• Nagraj

A specs wearing reporter by the day called Raj, he fights crime and evil with his superpowers thanks to a blessing by a snake god.

• Super Commando Dhruva

One of the most famous and inspiring superheroes and also a personal favorite, Dhruva has no superpower, except his ability to talk to animals.

• Doga

Doga is a fearless anti-hero, who doesn't think twice before killing criminals and is called 'Mumbai ka Baap'. He is one of the darkest and grittiest characters in the Indian comic books.

Let's support more of these Indian artists by reading and sharing their arts and stories and hope we get to see Doga and Nagraj on the big screen soon. 🇮🇳
