

You're the Navigators!

"DARN, I'M OLD!" was my first thought when we started on this February issue that you hold in your hands. Feels like just 15 months ago I was a wide-eyed and excited reader who joined a team that were like gods to me. Only, it wasn't 15 months, it was 15 years ago, but it feels like just 15 months. Yes, this is the 180th issue of Digit that I have worked on, and it honestly doesn't feel that long at all! I guess time flies when you're having fun, and boy do we have a lot of fun at Digit. It's extremely rare to be able to find a job in a field that you are passionate about and would do for free anyway!

Psst... don't tell my bosses that, I very much like earning my salary...

However, fun is something that is a double-edged sword at times. Instead of celebrating my own personal anniversary, I'd prefer to apologise to all of you for certain aspects of this magazine that have been slowly declining.

For starters, we are often late to print in the past year, and it's getting on everyone's nerves, and is especially disrespectful to you, our loyal readers. I cannot in good conscience blame anyone but myself for allowing this to happen, and I can only promise that this will be the last time.

We've always prided ourselves on giving it our all, always, without fail, because we love this magazine and it isn't just another "job". I think I can safely speak for all of us and say that we honestly haven't been giving it 110 per cent as we usually like to, and perhaps are more at 99 per cent right now, which is very unlike us.

Some of you have written in and noticed a change in our stories, and you've liked it. We promise to raise the bar even higher than that, and really push the limits so that every issue you buy from now on will be even more of a treasure trove of information than you expect from us.

In order to do so, however, I'm going to have to ask you to participate, and help us improve. You are going to have to get in touch with us. We've been your technology navigator for almost 2 decades, now we ask you to help us navigate your technology needs.

In the coming months, we will be conducting a few surveys, including the Icons Of Trust survey, where we ask you to rate brands based on your perceptions, and also a reader survey. This is not just for magazine readers, but for all Digit readers. However, obviously our magazine readers are our most special, most prized audience, and so what you tell us holds far more weight.

Something else we're trying is a diversification into a few new fields other than PC tech. Of course the magazine will always have core tech at its heart, and this is pretty evident from the fact that over 70 per cent of the magazine is dominated by that. However, as you have noticed, we're also trying to help serve you better by starting an auto tech section on our site (digit.in) and catering to geeks specifically through our geek site (geek.digit.in). Then there's always the fun of gaming that's brought to life via SKOAR!

We are also thinking of branching out into more categories that technology touches, and I'd like you to write in and tell us what else you'd like us to cover. This doesn't necessarily have to be in the magazine – it could be in the form of an app, or online, or even something you get in your email, or a Facebook group... anything. Doesn't even have to be in English, because we are very lucky to have some very brilliant vernac language editorial staff at Digit.

If you have an idea for something we should be doing, let us know, because at the end of the day, we just want to make sure that we are doing all we can to help you and other Indian geeks like yourself get the most out of technology, whether it's for a phone, a PC, troubleshooting, careers, DIYs... anything you can think of. In short, it's your turn to be the navigator, and I hope you will step up to the challenge so we can all benefit together.

Thank you from the bottom of my heart for being the best magazine readers in India, and for allowing me the opportunity to experience an unforgettable 180 months in technology! Dare I hope for 180 more?
