

MOVIE

Jumanji: Welcome to the Jungle

★★★★☆ | The thing about reboots is that most of them are pretty bad. Trying to remake an age old classic and attempting to make it better is quite risky. You risk inciting the wrath of fans. We're looking at you, Ghostbusters. Sometimes though, they manage to pull it off, like with the new Spider-Man: Homecoming movie for example, but those cases are quite rare. Now in the case of Jumanji: Welcome to the Jungle, even though it shares the same name as the age-old classic starring Robin Williams, it doesn't really try to do the same thing. In fact, the movie is nothing like the original. The new Jumanji is an originally made movie that simply borrows the main concept from the original of the same name – that of its players being sucked into a game. Only this time, the game in question – which is still Jumanji – is a video game.

We'll keep the spoilers to a minimum, but we have four kids who get sucked into the game taking up roles completely opposite to what they're like in real life. This forces them to confront their fears if they ever want to get out of the game. Everything about the movie, from the way events unfold, to the action scenes, were in one word, hilarious.

We found ourselves enjoying the movie from the start till the end. It looks like anything Dwayne Johnson touches turns to gold. Oh wait... we forgot about Baywatch... never mind. But this was, dare we say, the best movie to release this December, even better than The Last Jedi. * runs and hides!

TV SHOW

Black Mirror S4

★★★★☆ | Of course we binged through all six episodes. One thing is certain, Black Mirror stopped trying to establish what it was all about quite a while back. There's no hint of pretense towards that goal as the show explores a diversity in genres in its episodes that's not been seen previously. The most popular episodes this season, Arkangel and Hang the DJ, will remind you of a familiar feeling from previous seasons from episodes like Nosedive and San Junipero. These episodes place human feelings and emotions at the centre of a world where new technology affects them significantly. On the other hand, episodes like Crocodile and Metalhead fail to build context whatsoever, almost asking the viewer outright to accept that people can't really comprehend the impact of the technology that they've built. There is a certain change of tone in Black Mirror's storytelling this season – one that focuses less on convincing you that technology is dangerous and more on establishing that we must be at fault for technology to go this wrong.

Bonus Fact: The finale Black Museum puts all doubts to rest about the theory that almost all Black Mirror stories take place in a connected universe.

UP AND COMING

TV SHOW

Altered Carbon

Altered Carbon is a new sci-fi show set 300 years in the future where humanity has succeeded in being able to digitally transfer the human consciousness.

Release date: Feb 2, 2018

TV SHOW

The Tick

The first 6 episodes of the surprisingly good 'The Tick' are already out on Amazon Prime. The remaining 6 episodes are going to be airing by the end of February, so be sure to catch up!

Release date: Feb 23, 2018

MOVIE

Game Night

Game Night is a movie about a weekly couples game night which takes things to next level when someone arranges a murder mystery that seems a tad too real.

Release date: March 2, 2018