

know where they can find that food item. If you like what other foodies have spotted, give a 'nom' to that image which is a rating system to shortlist the best spotted foods. Foodspotting app is available on the iPhone and Android.

Shopping services

The daily deal model of group buying sprang up in India almost a year ago and now these services are gaining a lot of ground. They follow a unique method of offering group discounts where a new deal is on offer everyday. Offers on services such as tattoo parlours, spas, fast food joints are available at huge discounts which are often in tune of 50 to 70 per cent. A deal is active only for a limited hours. You can pay anywhere between ₹50 to ₹125 for a deal. If a certain number of people purchase that deal, it gets activated. Once the deal is on you are mailed a coupon which you then take to the vendor to get your discount. If the minimum number of people required to buy a deal is not met then the deal is called off and no one is charged any money. Web services which offer such deals are SoSasta.com, Mydala.com, Koovs.com and Snapdeal.com. SoSasta.com is a subsidiary of Groupon.com, a famous daily deal web site. You can get your deals from the mobile versions of these sites and it's better to book your deal before it gets exhausted. With 3G, you can book your discounts faster. The power of local crowdsourcing is leveraged by these web sites in an innovative way as customers who get addicted to such deals and offers often refer their friends to buy. For this, they use social media such as Facebook and Twitter. Some of these sites offer movie tickets and loyalty points (which you can use to buy more deals) if two friends referred by you make a purchase.

Find the best places to dine with Zomato.com

Using fitness apps to get some motivation in your running and exercise routine can be quite rewarding. However monitoring your fitness regime using such apps has not really picked up as a trend in India, but it's gaining momentum. These apps compare your performance with other users using social media. Apps such as Run Keeper and Daily mile keep an elaborate record of your performance with profiles, races and fitness reports. Daily mile also has a Twitter-like interface where you can boast about your work out session using a 140 character message and can check how other users have been performing.

Mobile assistant app

If you happen to be one of those people who don't find time to sift through the various deals, eating joints, and other happening places in your city then apps like Mybantu.com can come in handy. Mybantu.com is an Indian start up which uses an indigenously designed technology called ActiveRelevance to give relevant results. Mybantu's interface is simple and clean where you log in through your Facebook account and state your needs once submitted the Mybantu assistant would offer you a number of results. If you are interested in the offers proposed by the Mybantu assistant but are unsure of them then you can get an opinion from your friends using social media. ActiveRelevance works on 'humanized web' a model which uses recommendations from search engines, semantic engines, social media and web sites like Amazon.com, Rotten tomatoes, Yelp and Yahoo to generate answers for the query submitted. You get suggestions on movie venues, restaurant locations, health/ fitness services, shopping places and so on. The Mybantu assistant places results in a sticky notes-like grid where you can either like or trash a suggestion or ask other users on Twitter for their opinion. You can efficiently manage your needs by using tons of customisation and other options like profile creation, to do list, contacts list and your feed-

WAITING TO SHOW UP!

We're waiting for the following to catch up here, as they would make the local crowdsourcing bubble better and more integrated. Waze.com – a smartphone app that lets you upload traffic updates.

You would always find traffic status updates on your route, only thing is people should start using it more often here. We just hope people don't end up creating traffic jams or cause accidents while using it.

Editz.com – Don't you just love nitpicking on other people's work? Editz lets you do just that. It's an innovative way of correcting mistakes made by bloggers on their web pages. It allows you to correct typos on a web site and make it error free. As a writer you should enable the Editz add-on on your web page so others can identify and fix your errors.

back which you have given other users on their needs. The Mybantu assistant works even better on a 3G connection.

Apps not for everything!

According to Apple's approach there's an app for everything but there are a good number of crowdsourcing web-sites which still do not have a dedicated app. Below are web services for which we'd love to see an app soon.

This model of crowdsourcing truly leverages the power of the masses. Ideabounty.com is a creative platform for ad agency clients and designers. It brings together a pool of talented designers who work on an idea submitted by you. This service is no free lunch as you have to put up a bounty for the designers so they take up your brief seriously, the higher the bounty the more and better results you can expect. Also check out Wooshii.com. Another cool web site which works on a similar model is Cre-ateMyTattoo.com, which lets you choose between ample design ideas for your tattoo provided you put up a good bounty. 99 tests.com creates a launchpad for coders and program developers to showcase their skills and submit their codes as per the clients requirements and if your work gets selected you get the bounty.

Stay fit with Dailymile