

With Pendule, you can decide what you want to see on the web page

Firefox Add-ons

Mozilla Firefox is undoubtedly one of the most popular web browsers present. Apart from being extremely functional the best part of firefox is the fact that a lot more features can be implemented and the ease of use increases with the addition of add-ons and extensions. A recent user survey revealed that more than one third of firefox users use at least one add-on to enrich their browsing experience. More than two billion add-ons have been downloaded since Mozilla started maintaining statistics. There are a lot of add-ons online, which let you do different things with your browser.

Trying to get a hang of the ever-increasing world of Firefox add-ons can be extremely difficult and time consuming. We hope to make this task less daunting and listed below are a few must have add-ons to help you be more effective with your workflow.

Download Statusbar

One has to admit Firefox's default download window is not very appealing. Firstly it's a pop-up, opening up a new window when you begin a download and you always have to keep going back to this window to check the status of your download. But Download Statusbar changes all that, it's a helpful little add-on that just adds a tiny unobtrusive toolbar at the bottom of your browser, that keeps track of the progress of all your file downloads. It shows you the percentage completed, time remaining and has a many additional options like pausing, resuming, setting up a post download virus check or simply not showing the download of certain file types like images.

Morning Coffee

A lot of us have a basic set of web sites we visit every time we log on to the internet. The browser, by default, lets you set only one page as your homepage. The Morning Coffee add-on lets Firefox automate the entire process for you and makes sure you don't have to type in the same site addresses over and over every time you open your browser. Apart from specifying a list of sites to open, morning coffee also lets you schedule which of them to open on which particular day. You can schedule a weekly cycle and choose to have them pop-up when you open your browser or simply let them appear as individual tabs when you hit the coffee cup button beside your address bar.

WebMail Notifier

Normally you would have to visit every individual site for every mailbox you have to check for your email, but with the WebMail Notifier add-on, you can just put in your account information and a tiny little non intrusive button appears located at the corner of your firefox window telling you when you have received any new mail without you having to go to the web site. It gives you a small pop up notification at the bottom right corner of your browser whenever any new mail arrives in your inbox. You can click the icon to access your email in a new browser window. You can also set notification settings to open in a new tab or window automatically and to play a sound notification whenever a new email is received.

Personas Rotator

With Firefox 3, Mozilla lets you personalize your browser toolbar backgrounds and colours with custom made themes called personas. With so many thousands of personas now available, it's easy to get lost in them. There are so many cool personas out there yet you can setup only one to show up until you change it again manually. With Personas Rotator you can let Firefox pull personas from an online set of Firefox skins all sorted into a nest of categories and automatically keep changing them at whatever intervals you desire. But you should note that this add-on only works with the Personas Plus add-on.

Plain Clothes lets you personalise your web page