WE SAY

The sound signature is a lot like the M2 but with an over-accentuated treble section. For similar performance, but with better fit, comfort, isolation and, more neutral sound we'd recommend going for MEElectronics' M6 and at a lesser cost. 6.5

The Marshmallow was the pipsqueak of the lot with not much range across the spectrum. Though not bad, its performance pales in comparison to any of the IEMs featured here and the M6 from MEElectronics. What makes Marshmallow attractive is the colour options and price. 6.0

Highly exaggerated lower-mids and mids section make the sound mellow at the cost of clarity. Only piano-driven music sounds decent. The chord was another sore point for us; very flimsy. At this price, we'd urge you to look at other options. 6.0

Slightly exaggerated bass. Soundstaging was quite good with adequate instrument separation; the most roomy IEMs we've come across so far. Build quality of both housing and cord is good. Had the price been sub 2k buying these would've been a no brainer. 6.5

Silicon Power Blaze is a 32 GB USB 3.0 drive and backward compatible with USB 2.0 and USB 1.1. 32 GB is the highest capacity pen drive we've tested. However, for those looking at performance, the Kingston Data Traveller 16 GB makes better sense. 5.5

It's exactly like the Microsoft Arc Mouse. The buttons and central scroll-wheel work well. The basic plug-n-play mouse works well on a tabletop within a range of 20 feet. Its foldable panel reduces the mouse's size, making it a portable contender for your laptop while travelling. 6.5

Makes sense if you're looking at speedy data transfer and a sleek-looking drive. The detachable SATA-to-USB 3.0 adapter means that this drive can be used in SATA brackets found on various Seagate products such as its HD Media players. Great companion to USB 3.0 laptops. 7.5

For those looking at an affordable high capacity USB 3.0 drive, the Silicon Power S10 comes recommended. Performance junkies are better off with the Seagate GoFlex Slim 320GB drive, but will have to pay a similar amount for less than half the capacity offered by S10. 6.5
