

Reddit cultures

The vast wilderness of Reddit is a breeding ground for a diverse range of cultures; from healthy self-improvement to absurd darkness that can rival the likes of /b. Of course we can't really tell you about the bad stuff without flirting with serious trouble, so here are three cultures that are clean and fun... mostly

IAMA

Famous personalities or people engaged in interesting professions come on this platform to do a bare-all question answer session with the reddit community. So one day it's a bouncer from a famous nightclub, the next it's a US navy officer who's served on board an indian vessel, and the next it's Woody Harrelson (which admittedly did not go so well).

Project Enrichment

Remember how Tyler Durden gave his fight club cronies weekly tasks to do? This is something like that except these tasks are not badass, but rather towards self improvement. Every week the reddit community posts challenges such as Wake up one hour earlier to Go a week without visiting time wasting sites. You follow them scrupulously and better your life!

Earth Porn

As opposed to what, tentacle porn? Relax, don't get jumpy guys, it's simply a section on reddit where the most beautiful pictures of nature are put up for the community's viewing pleasure. Expect to find sprawling landscapes, endless mountain ranges, lakes, rivers and everything in between.

How we unwind

The Piano Guys

These guys create musical magic often with just a cello and a piano. They've covered artists such as Adele, Coldplay and classical masters like Bach and Mozart. Their videos are shot in breathtaking locales and each song has a story to tell.

Hunger Games

This month we all went for hunger games and came out quite exhilarated. Yes, a society that can create creatures out of thin air probably doesn't need mining towns but hey the premise of a fight to the death is always fascinating.

Neil deGrasse Tyson

He is what one would call the most badass scientist that ever lived. Don't get it? Know that "we've got a badass here" rage character. Yea that's him and we've been lapping up his scientific videos this whole month.