Q&A

scanning is a resource heavy activity and will tend to slow things down. If there is another background process on, then it will make things even more slower. It is a natural process for everything to slow down while a system scan is under process. You should ideally perform system scans when you will not be using your system actively.

Hibernation option missing

My problem is that there is no Hibernation option right side of Shut Down tab. Please help me in activating that option. My keyboard has no dedicated power and sleep buttons on it.

A To activate the Hibernation option, simply run command prompt as an administrator. Enter the command `powercfg -h on` and press enter. Now you will be able to see the Hibernation option in beside the Shut Down button. If you still cannot see it, then go to Power Options > Change Plan Settings > Change Advanced Power Settings. Expand the Sleep option and under Allow Hybrid Sleep, make sure that this option is Off. This should make the Hibernation option visible. This step is necessary only if the first step fails.

Hibernation option activation

Faulty hotkey

I have an HP 630 Notebook PC with the following configuration:

- Processor: Intel Core i3 M 370 @ 2.40 GHz
- RAM: 2 GB
- HDD: 500 GB
- OS: Microsoft Windows XP Service Pack 3

My problem is that out of all the hot keys provided on the keyboard, only the brightness hot keys are not working. I have to manually go and set the brightness in the graphics properties dialog box. Please help me in resolving this issue. Thank you very much in advance.

A You will need to download HP Support Assistant which will run a scan and inform you of any outdated drivers:

You will probably need to update your hotkey drivers, if they are out-dated.
