

Buzz

The latest news from the world of technology which includes MacBook refreshes and Intel's Internet TV

LG buys webOS from HP

LG has reportedly agreed to buy the rights to webOS from HP and use this OS in its line of Smart TVs

✉ I've been reading Digit for over 6 years now and it's THE BEST tech magazine ever. I specially love the Toolbox Q&A section. It has helped me resolve so many of my PC issues. Apart from that I also love the Tried and Tested section.

The moment I get my Digit, the first thing I search for is the Q&A section and it really excites me to read about new issues and their resolution. I thought the Q&A section in February was too short. I know it depends on the number of users who pose their problems but my question is has Team Digit ever found any problem whose solution you thought might be really useful for readers? Please include them too in the Q&A section. Come on, you people are true geniuses! Give us more knowledge.

One more thing about this issue: in the cabinets test, the review of a particular cabinet was written on one page but the image of that cabinet was two pages away, and this was the case for all of the cabinets. Please try to keep the review alongside the image of the product. Alternatively, keep the writing on one page and dedicate the other page to the images.

Today what I know about computers is all thanks to you people! Even in exams, instead of reading my programming books I prefer your Fast Track. It's awesome! I would really love to see an FT on Python and Perl Programming.

Aman Kumar

4 We're really happy to know that you like our Q&A section. These days we get very few readers who first go to the Toolbox Q&A section. Sometimes we have to accommodate ads in the Q&A section which cuts into space for questions and their responses. In our Q&A section, we shortlist questions which we will print since it's not possible to include all queries in print. The idea is to inform the reader about a new problem, and we rarely repeat the same issues in back-to-back issues. If we come across an interesting issue, that also goes into the Q&A section.

Regarding the cabinets comparison test, we sometimes keep the winners in the later pages to maintain suspense as to who the winners are. For this reason, the images and text won't always be on the same page. We'll definitely keep your suggestion of having text and image separate in mind. We're pleased to know that you rely on our Fast Tracks to help you in your exams, but please do not ignore your programming text books as they're equally important. We'll discuss the FT topics that you've mentioned in our edit meets.

Feedback for the February 2013 issue of Digit

Nimish

✉ I've just subscribed to Digit and received my first issue. There are some things I want to suggest to you regarding the magazine. Digit has more ads and less reviews. I was subscribed to another tech magazine but it's now only available in a digital format, so I switched over to Digit. But the reality is that magazine contained only 69 pages, but none of them were useless. If I start from the beginning of that magazine, the first two pages contains the suggestions and the questions asked by people, then the 4-5 pages contained a short review of the gadgets which are about to launch. You may be wondering why I'm telling you all this? Well, because I want Digit to be like this – less ads and more reviews with a first look at gadgets. In this issue of Digit there were a few reviews of gadgets on the last pages of the magazine (really few). I also want you to review the gadgets of local companies like Portronics, Bose etc. So please reply and try to change your magazine a little.

Harsh Khurana

4 You want a Gadget magazine, and Digit is not one. Digit is a "technology navigator". Anyone can fill pages with "reviews" of gadgets and more gadgets, but that will only be of use to you when you're buying that particular gadget.

That said, we're looking to add a little more lifestyle angle, maybe through another addition to the Digit package. Keep your eyes peeled for that, but again I should tell you, it will be lifestyle with a difference, not an overdose of gadgets.

There's more to technology life than the latest gizmos, and Digit aims to help people through all those aspects. We give you knowledge that helps you get jobs, have intelligent discussions, argue, have an opinion, and yes, even buy smart though our rigorous testing processes which are a bit more sophisticated than normal product reviews. That said, if you still feel that all of the other content including articles and software in Digit is just not to your liking, I would recommend you stop buying it. We're not going to become a "gadget mag" ever, so promising you anything else would be a lie, and we don't lie to our customers, even if it means losing business.

Robert

✉ I've read many issues of Digit and am a huge fan of the magazine. I feel I can learn a lot if I worked with Team Digit. Is it pos-