

WHO DO YOU TRUST?

How much do you trust the brands whose products you see on store shelves around you?

The Icons of Trust survey was started over a decade ago to help not just you, but also the brands that want to sell to you. After all, if you don't really know about or trust a brand just yet, it's the brand who gains the most by listening to you and taking steps to allay your fears. This year, like every other, thousands of you responded to our call, and we want to thank you for taking the time to help improve the Indian technology industry as a whole.

So how does it work?

Pretty simple actually, most of you would have already taken the survey, and know that we ask a comprehensive list of questions about brands, to try and gauge your feeling for the brand. We give utmost importance to your thoughts of a brand that you own products of, obviously. However, we also consider your sentiment towards brands you haven't bought products from.

Awareness and availability

The survey is broken into multiple parts. The first bit is awareness, made up of unaided and aided questions. So, you're asked questions such as, "Which brand springs to mind?" or "Can you name all the brands you know?", etc. Obviously you cannot trust a brand you've never heard of, right? Neither will you buy products you don't see around you, and that's where availability comes in.

Satisfaction and credibility

This bit of the survey quizzes respondents on how their experience with a brand's products has been. Basically how satisfied are you with a product you've bought, and how much faith do you have in products you haven't bought based on what you hear and experience around you.

Loyalty and quality

A good brand is able to offer you such a good experience with a product from one category, that you're more positive about buying products in different categories from them. This establishes brand loyalty, and we measured the loyalty you have towards brands. We also quizzed you about your thoughts about the quality of products brands offer, and whether you'd recommend them to others as well.

Trust

Once we've tallied thousands of responses, we then assign weights to every question appropriately, much like we do for our comparison test findings. The rather simple looking end result is an overall "Trust Score" for every brand on a hundred. Being Digit readers, you also know that we are quick to penalise, and this often results in a negative score for some brands. Does this mean that a brand that gets a negative score makes bad products? Not at all! All this means is that brands that don't do well in this survey have to take some extraordinary measures to build up trust with the Indian technology buyer, and perhaps need to change their strategies. Also, brands that lose ground to competitors are given a wake-up call, and can perhaps strive to regain your trust by increasing awareness, availability, satisfaction and quality...

Without further ado, we give you the results and findings of the Icons of Trust 2013 survey, for the 10 most responded to categories.
