

SKOAR!

Xenophages and Necromorphs vie for your blood (and money). Find out what we think

Community

The ICONS OF TRUST survey is complete and the winners are out. Also find out what are online communities are upto

The worst lessons in history

If the children are the future of our race, and the foundation on which we will stand, the teachers are the hard working masons who will shape that foundation. Unfortunately, sometimes they go a little too far. All these stories here are true. We kid you not.

Ridungulous

Imagine going on a camping trip with your whole class and then being handed a packet of chocolate covered almonds while you're in the middle of the woods dreaming of the comforts of your home. Well that would be your unlucky day. The staff thought that it would be a "good" idea to coat the almonds in moose dung. A "trust-building" activity they called it.

Murderous

A teacher was apparently shot to death by a rampaging gunman in front of 380 students. After the students panicked, vomited, screamed and cried and generally experienced the most terrifying day of their lives, the principal informed them that it was all an act and that they had to solve the "crime". This takes being "scared straight" to a whole new level.

Shocking

You're a happy-go-lucky kid whose lost in its own world and a cop offers you the opportunity to wash his car. What do you do? You wash it you little whippersnapper! 'Cause if you don't, he's going to electrocute you with a 50,000V Taser. At least, that's what Officer Christopher Webb did. He claimed it was an accident of course.

Life Lessons

Survival of the fittest is a concept that is very hard to explain to a kid. Someone who thoughtlessly clips the wings off a fly, but will care for the sickliest puppy. A teacher in Florida decided to take matters into her own hands when she asked her students to bury a couple of rejected baby rabbits. Alive. Needless to say, they refused. But she did the job anyway.

Creative punishment

What do you do if you're teaching a class of rowdy teens and need to get them under control? You strip and also threaten to throw one of them out the window. You don't discipline the students or anything like that. That's all passé. This is the new cool. How else would a frumpy old teacher get the message across to the younger generation?

The Slave Trade

Slavery was one of the true evils (still is) of pre-civil war America and what best way to drive the point home than to bind the hands and legs of your entire class with duct tape? No one volunteered but the teacher picked one anyway (you can probably guess his race) and the poor kid was bound and shoved under a desk. Just to prove a point.