Captured by a guy from his backyard using a telescope, webcam and a Hydrogen alpha filter. The results are amazing! <http://digit.in/Yqkhdv>

Unwind

How we unwind

Childhood's end

We've been plotting to end our editor's dominance in Quake for some time now. Playing every day and hoping to polish our skills to an unholy level of perfection. Unfortunately, no matter how good we think we are, Raaabo is still that little bit better, and he's probably going to whoop our presumptuous as anyway.

digit DIARY

Games like Dead Space 3, Anirudh's gun and increasingly "violent" Quake sessions have turned the entire editorial team from harmless (physically) geeks into fledgling Spartans. Everybody is pumped up and itching to unleash their energy in a frenzied click-fest and Siddharth in particular has been swayed by the, frankly disturbing, gyrations of Harlem Shake videos and spends many a waking hour gawking at them like a sand-bagged goldfish.

Speaking of Dead Space 3, a long round of slow claps for Anirudh please; the weekend that he was supposed to play Dead Space 3, his PC died on him. After fruitlessly meddling with it, he finally brought it to office so as to run a complete set of diagnostics, and also to back up a lifetime's worth of precious data. Unfortunately, while reinstalling Windows, he accidentally deleted the partition containing his data. 2.4TB of it! He blames it on Microsoft's "flawed" installation method, but we know better.

Oh and before we forget, Siddhant finally managed to beat Anirudh at Quake this month. His excitement was short-lived though. Jumping for joy is all well and good, but being exceedingly tall at the same time, one needs to be more careful. He literally knocked himself out when he "inadvertently" ran into our bathroom's door frame.
