

Comet ISON incoming

Scientists are hoping that the Comet ISON will put on a show for Earthlings in late 2013 as it barrels towards the Sun <http://dgit.in/Yfnxwa>

HTC One unveiled

The HTC One is powered by a quad core "Krait 300" processor at 1.7GHz. More details here: <http://dgit.in/XtJdl8>

Brilliant case mods

Stock cases are passé. Check out these awesome case mods designed and implemented by modders from all over the world. You wanted droolworthy products, well, here they are

Siddhant Sharma

readersletters@thinkdigit.com

A normal cabinet is so boring and plain. It lacks a certain something and even if you've spent tonnes of money on a good case, it still doesn't make a personal statement. The cases showcased here have been made by some very dedicated modders who have put in a lot of hard-earned money, time and effort in their creation. Without further ado, let's go through our pick of some of the best case mods we've seen.

Steam Planet II By ArgosMod

Someone had a real steampunk fetish to come up with a case like this. What you are looking at is the so-called Steam Planet 2 case mod. An intricately detailed mod that includes copper coloured gears around the side panels, a plethora of copper pipes and even copper rivets. The front is probably the coolest part of the entire design, featuring a really fancy fan that's made to look like it came from a jet engine. The feet are also quite fascinating; the stock feet have been replaced by brass gargoyle feet. The chimneys on the top of the case are an elegant touch – you can't have a true steampunked case without any outlet for all that steam, can you? The same holds true for a glass dome and pressure gauge. Don't forget to check this insane case mod by clicking the following URL: <http://dgit.in/11W7HLw>

Starscr3am By Tantric

With a name like that, it's hard to miss exactly what this mod attempts to recreate. The Cooler Master Stacker 830 NVIDIA edition case that forms the skeleton for this mod is replete with Decepticon tattoos and other minor details, such as fans that are designed to look like turbine blades (Starscream is an aircraft after all) and the fake cockpit on the front. The fans aren't just for show, though, as they house a 360mm radiator. The vents have also been carefully crafted to look like aircraft flaps, not to mention the internal tubing is also very reminiscent of the fuel lines seen on most commercial engines. It is important to note that the case isn't just form, though. It is extremely functional as well. The innards, i.e., the motherboard tray and graphics card bays, have been rotated by a full 90 degrees anti-clockwise and the graphics cards are actually "hanging" from the top of the case. Of course, as is expected of a top-notch case mod, everything is liquid-cooled and LEDs are strategically placed all over. Check out this mod at: <http://dgit.in/UJJUKq>

Ducati Trooper By raiden73

Ducati is well known all over the world, not just for the performance of their bikes, but for their Italian craftsmanship and elegant designs as well. With this Ducati Trooper case of his, raiden73 has done his best to replicate the elegance and beauty of the Ducati designs, specifically the 848. The Cooler Master Storm Trooper has been painted in a fiery shade of Ducati red, and carbon fibre has also been used wherever possible. Internally, in an unusual decision, the PSU is housed in what seems to be a leather seat and the CPU's water block has a "Ducati" logo emblazoned on the surface. The entire case has been given a nice, glossy finish as well. All in all, an excellent mod. Check it out over here: <http://dgit.in/136Sarv>

Normandy Revo By MooZ

This Normandy inspired mod is for all you Mass Effect fans out there. MooZ used a Thermaltake Armor Revo for this project and what a job he's done! He's replicated Normandy's original paint scheme and there is a nice, "Normandy SR1"