Unwind

How we unwind

Ant farm

SiddhANT is still a harassed little kid in many ways. Siddharth and Anirudh ruthlessly take advantage of this untapped treasure trove of joyous potential and farm his fertile brain for all it's worth. Every word that comes out of the poor kid's mouth is scrutinized, his very beliefs shattered and restructured. It's a wonder he survived this long.

Blaze of glory

It seemed like any other day, any other session of Quake, but there was something different; something not quite right in the air that day. A sense of desperation, the feeling you get when you see a fight to the death between two men (a child and a man in this case). This was the day the Ant beat Sid in Quake. A feat that will, sadly, never be repeated again.

Intern of the year

Despite the continuous mental bombardment from Anirudh and Siddharth, and despite streaming eyes after each Quake session, the Ant has managed to hold on to his individuality and a semblance of sanity and we know of no intern who could stand up to that much battering with this much fortitude. If ever we had an "Intern of the year" award, it would go to Siddhant for sure.

digit DIARY

A comparatively silent month at Digit. Not because we weren't doing much but more because we had headphones to test. Everyone turned into a version of Nimish as they sat silently at their PCs, grimly listening to their favourite tracks over and over again as they tried to determine the best set of cans for your precious ears. The continuous testing took its toll though. Both Anirudh and Siddharth have no intention of listening to those very same favourite tracks ever again.

In other news, Nash and Jayesh charged off to Digit and Nokia's Gaming Bootcamp, and had loads of fun soaking in the adulation showered upon them by eager devs (and Digit fans). It made them feel nothing short of celebrities – without an entourage, though. Jayesh even managed to pick out Anirudh's doppelganger (who's a Digit Squad member) in the crowd, introducing him to Mithun (special projects guy for Digit and Anirudh's bff). Now Mithun's stopped talking to Anirudh, declaring this doppelganger his bestest friend ever!

Swapnil from our Noida office stopped by the Digit madhouse in Mumbai, and regaled us with some rather interesting (and possibly made up) theories on inbreeding in the USA.
