Unsubscribe works like a charm

Call Blocker and Calls Blacklist if you're using an Android smartphone: The latter has built a steady reputation for being a simple, no-frills app to blacklist unwanted callers and block any communication from them, while the former has all the essential features along with a community blacklist manager which lets you tap into a wider network of black-listed numbers by other users of the app. For iPhones, iBlackList for US $12 is the most comprehensive app to block spam calls and messages for iOS users – however, you need to jailbreak your device to download and use the app

Stop spam emails

Instances of email spam creeping into your inbox has reduced drastically with email providers deploying smarter algorithms to catch inbound mails from suspicious mail servers. There is very little you can do apart from maintaining whitelists or filters for your email inbox to ensure you're only troubled by email that you really want. However, for people who use a desktop email client like Outlook or Thunderbird, definitely check out something like SpamBayes – a cross-platform spam filter. It requires users to train the filter, as you classify spam and ham (non-spam, legit) emails in your inbox, and with time the filter gets better. To deal with newsletter spam in your inbox, check out Unroll.me, a beta service that lets you easily fight newsletter spam in your Gmail, Google Apps and Yahoo mail inbox. Alternatively, you can also add the Unsubscribe.com Chrome extension which lets you easily drop out of mailing lists in your Gmail, Yahoo or Outlook inbox.

Stop Facebook, Twitter spam

For all its privacy fiasco and social blunders in the past, Facebook, despite being a behemoth in the social media space, offers robust built-in features to block and minimize your exposure to spam messages. The ability to block anything within Facebook is controlled via the Blocking feature available in your account's Privacy Settings. Through this one screen, you can block Facebook users, apps, event invites and app invites, all in one go. You can also discreetly maintain a restricted list of users – people who aren't part of your inner circle – and Facebook automatically restricts them to view only your public updates. Additionally, you can install apps like Norton Safe Web which automatically scans through your Facebook feed to weed out and eliminate nefarious, spammy links.

Twitter is besieged with spam accounts spewing spam tweet. The low-tech, manual way to block a suspected spam account is by visiting its profile page, click on the black silhouette icon and click "Block" or "Report for spam". Alternatively, you can also check out services like <http://stoptweet.com> which identifies all spam accounts following you, deleting them, and protecting your Twitter account from spammers in the future.

Stop spam on your company's blog

If your company's blog is hosted on a custom Wordpress installation, make sure you sign up for a Wordpress.com account for a free Akismet authentication key. Just copy-paste the key details into the Akismet plugin on your company's blog to block 99 per cent spam that comes its way in the form of malicious comments or trackbacks.
