Use these tips to breeze through a photo shoot using a digital camera!

Focusing

You might face this problem if you use an auto-focus camera—the camera captures the distant background and blurs the subject. This is because cameras are usually designed to have a central focus. The solution is quite simple. Point the camera at the subject and position it in the centre of the frame. Keep the shutter button pressed halfway down to lock the focus on the subject and re-position the camera so the scene is framed to your liking. Finally, press the shutter button down completely to take a snapshot.

The Rule Of Thirds

One of the most popular rules of photography, it applies to both traditional, as well as digital photography. According to this rule, if the frame of the viewfinder were to be divided into thirds, both horizontally and vertically, then the four intersections are the best places to put your subject, instead of the centre of the frame. This yields an appealing image.
