

in the foreground. Also, bracket your exposure so you have a variety of images to choose from.

Explore Reflections

Reflections can add a lot of interest to a photo - and they are everywhere. Day and night, they are on the water, in windows, and on any shiny, reflective surface.

Play With Shadows

Bright sunny days may look beautiful, but they aren't the best days for photography. The hard, direct light casts black shadows everywhere. But shadows are interesting - you just have to think about them and where they fall. Too often we notice just the bright part of the subject when composing a picture.

Play With Patterns

Patterns are everywhere - you just have to practise noticing them. Some have a centre of interest; many just an unbroken rhythm that makes them interesting.

Look For The Unusual

If you keep your eyes open for scenes that are humorous or interesting in any way, you'll be surprised at what you might find. You just have to be ready to capture them when you see them.