

their use into virtually every aspect of daily business delivery. Weblogs may have started as an underground tool for freedom of expression, but the business world is quickly adopting them to liberate their intellectual capital, their product and service development, their salespeople and customers from the incredibly limiting modes of conventional offline and online communication.