From the page: "This is not a document on the mechanics of sending e-mail—which buttons to push or how to attach a photograph. Those details are different for every different email software package, and are better handled by manuals for the program. I instead focus on the content of an e-mail message: how to say what you need to say. I don't think of this as e-mail etiquette (commonly called netiquette) because I don't think these guidelines merely show you how to be a nice person. These guidelines show you how to be more efficient, clear, and effective."
