

already, WDH is more than just a handbook on Web designing. It's more like a one-stop shop for everything a web designer is looking for. Links are divided by convenient and crisp sections. A must-visit if you know you're looking for something, but don't exactly know what it is.

11.3.3 Use IT

(www.useit.com)

Use IT is Web guru Jakob Nielsen's Web site on "useable information technology." This is a great place to learn if one is developing a Web site for a company. Nielsen has loads of experience consulting on Web usability, and shares this on his Web site. There are some great tips a developer can get here for B2C and B2B Web sites. His Alertbox Columns are gems of information on how to make Web sites more user-friendly, and how to make sure one gets the right return-on-investment for one's Web site.

11.3.4 CSS Zen Garden (www.csszengarden.com)

For anyone hung up on CSS, this is definitely the place to visit. The Zen Garden is an attempt to get CSS taken seriously by Web design artists. Basically, the site allows CSS artists to develop CSS stylesheets. A brilliant example of their work is seen by clicking the "Select a Design" links, which change the design of the homepage!
