

Securing The Desktop

Nearly 90 per cent of all PCs run the Windows operating systems—this makes Windows a victim of its own popularity. With more than three million lines of code, it is a given that vulnerabilities will exist in the operating system. Microsoft's security initiatives since Windows XP have done much to alleviate the problem; however, the fact remains that securing your desktop is still something you need to do.