

software such as Internet Explorer, Firefox, Opera, and... the list of software and operating systems in the Secunia database currently includes 11,361 items! If you use a certain software, in all probability, you will find it in Secunia's database.

Information is added to the database daily, through software suggestions from customers and vulnerability reports affecting new software.

You'll need to check out the page to see the sheer amount of useful information there. And most of what you need to know is right there on the index page - highlights, and the latest advisories. The "highlights" section is usually one of the first places on the Web where critical security information crops up on the Web.

Sophos

www.sophos.com

Sophos is a security firm that makes anti-virus software and such. But their Web site holds more than just information about their products - the latest security threats are listed, as are the latest "news, events and awards." There's a "hot topic" on the index page,