

Use FeedFlare so it's easier for readers to tell their friends about your blog

The next page lets you configure StandardStats, and we recommend checking the Clickthrough option. This lets you track the number of times a link in your post is clicked; if you're linking to corporate Web sites, these statistics should play a role in snagging advertisers.

Optimising Your Feed

When you login to FeedBurner, click on the title of your blog to be taken to the control panel, from where you can select the various ways to configure the way your feed looks in an RSS reader. Here are the options you have:

1. SmartFeed: This has quite a simple purpose—to ensure that your feed is compatible with virtually any RSS reader available. Recommended, because you never know what reader someone is using.
2. FeedFlare: Enabling this feature lets you put links into your feed posts that will help users give you feedback or tell their friends about your blog—"E-mail the Author", "Digg This", "Post to Del.icio.us", and so on. At the bottom of the page, you need to
