

4.2 Collaborative Wiki—WetPaint.com

If you want to do any kind of collaborative writing project with a group of people—friends, family, or even just strangers who share your interests, then WetPaint is one site that you must definitely look at.

A wiki at its simplest is a Web application that allow many people to add and edit content—similar to Wikipedia. However, while Wikipedia is solely focused on encyclopedic information, WetPaint's mission is different. It wants to allow users to start a collaborative writing project on any project that they fancy. There are tons of WetPaint wikis already up and running and you may want to take a look see at the existing wikis before choosing to start your own. For example a simple search for Harry Potter on WetPaint threw up 859 results. Likewise, there will be thousands of WetPaint sites already created on various topics. Search and browse around and look at the different wikis already up and running before making the decision to start your own. In general the choice between joining some other collaborative project, or starting your own wiki, will depend on what exactly your objectives are. If say you want to have a Wiki group just for the magical weapons and implements used in the Harry Potter novels then maybe you may need to create a separate wiki if there are none on the subject.

The disadvantage with starting your wiki, espe-

Participate in or start a wiki on your favourite subject

Setting up WetPaint—Step 1