

If you've a vague idea about Zoho ("some Google Docs clone...") then here's where you get boggle-eyed at the extent of their services covering office, personal, and business productivity, including free versions of Customer Relationship Management and Project Management software. And oh, not to make too fine a point of it—did you know Zoho is an Indian company?

All of Zoho's services are accessible from <http://zoho.com>. Of the 16 services currently offered, 10 can be accessed with a single username and password. For reasons not very clear, the other sites require a separate sign-up, though we're assuming that at some time in the future you would have single-window sign-on for the entire Zoho family. There is a nice accounts management page (<http://accounts.zoho.com>) that shows you at a glance all the services that are part of your Single Sign On (SSO) profile and the ones where you are currently logged in.

Centralised access control to all your Zoho Services

7.1 The Office Suite

Here are your drop-in replacements for MS Word, Excel, and PowerPoint. Nothing to download or install—just type in the URL and watch everything you need load up in your browser. In comparison to Google Docs and Spreadsheets, Zoho Writer and Sheet are almost exactly the same. A plus with Zoho is their presentation