

12.3 Backgrounds

The part of the slide that does not contain text and graphics is referred to as the background, and collectively consists of colours, effects (like textures and transparency), gradients, patterns, and more.

You might want to change and play with backgrounds—for example, think of a presentation where you need to use corporate logos.

One way to customise your background is to apply various textures

To change backgrounds in PowerPoint 2003, select Format > Background. A drop-down menu will appear when you click on the arrow at the bottom of the Background Fill preview area. You can choose custom colours or more effects like Gradient, Texture, Pattern, etc. Each of these options has several sub-options (like in the Gradient tab, you can choose the colours, shading styles, and transparency, while the Texture tab has a choice of 24 inbuilt styles) with preview panes.

Another way is to add fill effects
