

Web Browsers

The early adopters of the Web quickly realised that getting computers connected to the Internet was not enough; they needed software that would allow the guest computer to browse the information hosted on those connected computers. This thought process led to the formation of the Web browser. Let's take a closer look at all these browsers in the next few pages, starting with the most familiar.