Those comfortable working with MS Excel will feel at home with Zoho Sheet. There are two possible themes available—Coriander Green and Metallic Grey, which could be changed at ease depending on your taste. Zoho Sheets can be accessed in 16 international languages in addition to English. Currently, none of the Indian languages are supported, but it gives you the option to request your language, so that they could start working on it. Besides, you could contribute as a translator yourself. The sheet in the screenshot shows a sample spreadsheet prepared using Zoho Sheet. It had good response time for each cell entered. It didn't give a feel that it was an online tool—in fact, it felt as good as MS Excel installed on the system.

An interesting function provided by Zoho is the chat function. Once you share your sheet with others in your chosen group, just click on the chat button to the bottom right of the screen, and real time discussions are possible among the group. Next to the chat button is the Comments button—use it to submit offline comments for others to see.

Zoho Sheet resembles MS Excel in so many ways!
